A WINE TASTING NEAR TINY TOWN, USA — Our TTT.com sybarite reports that people are, at this very moment (which will not be the same moment you read this) gathered at a wine tasting and "catching a pretty good buzz, some of them."

While attendees at such bacchanals are encouraged to buy local wines and to sample them to no deleterious effect, many a bourgeois dipso slips in attired with LaCoste shirt, khakis and topsiders, eager to sample the entire lot for a free buzz. "These types are often identifiable by the acne rosacea mapping their nose and cheeks," the reporter states.

Women often sport summery dresses and flat shoes. Merchants do not discourage tipplers as quite a few go home with a case of local red they never would have purchased if they weren't half in a bag. Photo credit: Shiloh Sugarbush
